This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1852 edition. Excerpt: ... which, he is vulnerable everywhere. Men, on the contrary, often take a solitary ramble in search of the buffalo-they have to creep through dense bush to find him; and when they come upon him, in some small open space, they are face to face with a fero-skin jacket, but he had further ornamented cious brute, who (unlike the king of the forest) never declines a contest; and who, as he charges his enemy, presents to him a head covered with an impenetrable helmet of massive horn. I firmly believe that it is safer work to track a lion alone than a buffalo; and yet, such is the prestige of a name, that no one (except one gallant Major, of whom hereafter) ever thinks of intruding unaccompanied on his Majesty's rest, while dozens of the Boers take a stroll alone with the hopes of meeting a buffalo. Mynheer Hendrik Rens was a sturdy farmer in the Colesberg district, extremely fond of sport, especially of any sport that endangered his neck. He cared little for shooting a partridge, or hunting a wild buck; but tracking a lion, or intruding on the domestic retreat of a buffalo, this was a genuine source of delight to him. I was enjoying Master I-I6IIIrik's hospitality, and how could I refuse to join him in his favourite sport? He suspected the " whereabouts" of a buffalo, and the idea of leaving the animal in quiet possession of his feeding-ground was too distressing to his mind for him to be able to endure it. Accordingly I agreed to be his companion in searching out the monster, and endeavouring to bag him. Our equipment was rather remarkable as we started, and so I will endeavour to give the reader a faint sketch of it. We were mounted on a couple of little tough-looking ponies, and being both tall men (and the worthy Dutchman...
