Storm Crow has escaped—and the only man who can catch him is Jack Swann

International terrorist Ismael Boese, also known as Storm Crow, has plenty to answer for. After threatening to ignite a bomb in London, and perpetrating a chemical attack in Saint Peter's Square in Rome, Boese is finally captured. But, before he's brought to trial and questioned about the attacks, and his connections to renowned terrorist Carlos the Jackal, he violently slashes his way out of prison.

Now, antiterrorism expert Jack Swann must pursue the man thought to be Storm Crow. As Boese hops between continents, Swann realizes that he will never capture this maestro of destruction alone—he needs the help of US Special Agent Johnny Harrison. Jeff Gulvin's international thriller is sure to excite as he traces the path of these determined agents across the world of international espionage. As the two men trail Boese around the globe, they begin to suspect that Storm Crow is perhaps bigger than Boese himself, and may have connections they never could have expected.
