When Eddy, a slippery eel salesman rolls into town, Prosper is not interested in striking up a business relationship with him. Prosper, after all, has enough to contend with—his marriage is in trouble, haunted by the spectre of his deceased lover, Ines. But Eddy's is persistent in his "generosity" and his desire to bring progress to the rural African community. Faced with an invasive new species in his lake, Prosper's fortunes decline with the fish population and he is confronted by the stifling feeling that his world is shrinking around him. Meanwhile Edige, the town's barkeep, struggles to resolve his own unrequited feelings for Prosper's wife and whether or not to act on them. A haunting and powerful story set in a rural African village, A Man A Fish is a meditation on love, loss, and environmental sabotage.
